moderated slightly following a strong start to the year (signs that President Trump's business friendly agenda is stalling in Congress might have something to do with that). Meanwhile, shares of UK chipmaker Imagination Technologies plunged about 70% on news that Apple would stop using the the company's chips for its graphics. Sales of cars in the US were weaker than expected in March, furthering concerns that American demand for cars may have peaked; big automakers like Ford and GM had a rough week while Tesla soared in value (for other reasons!). Finally, Anglo-Dutch consumer giant Unilever announced plans to increase returns to its shareholders following its rejection of Kraft-Heinz's attempted takeover in February.

That's it for now! We wish you a Happy Easter and egg-cellent mid semester break! Eat, play, laugh... and shed the guilt because chocolate is proven to release happy endorphins (don't quote us on that though).

Before we go, here's a cartoon to kick off the long weekend...
